Silver Spring, MD --- The National Association of State Utility Consumer Advocates passed five resolutions at its Annual Meeting in San Francisco last week covering the "Clean Power Plan," water/wastewater industry earnings gap myth, consumer protections for distributed generation customers, reasonable rates, high quality services and consumer protections for telephone and broadband customers, and states laws and regulations to reform licensing and consumer protections over competitive energy suppliers.

The resolutions can be found at <http://nasuca.org/event/2014-annual-meeting/>.

Founded in 1979, NASUCA is a national organization of over 40 state utility consumer advocate offices. Members are designated by state law to represent utility consumers before state public utility commissions and the courts.
